As a student at the University of St. Thomas, you acquire the skills that prepare you for a professional career, and you learn the values of goodness, discipline, knowledge, and community. This course enables you to synthesize these two sets of principles and investigate what it means to be a member of a democratic community that values entrepreneurism and innovation.

In this course, which is team-taught by five professors from different disciplines, we will investigate a number of fascinating questions:

1. What does a flourishing human life look like?
2. What is human freedom and how much of it is necessary?
3. Is the division of labor a benefit or a bane?
4. What are entrepreneurs? Do we need them?
5. What kind of social order makes humans flourish?
6. Should the state interfere in the division of labor?
7. Do markets have a right to be free? Should entrepreneurs be active in politics?
8. Will the market provide for our environment?
9. How does globalization affect our civic duties?

Do you think you know the answers to these questions? Would you like to find out whether famous authors agree with you? If so, this course is right for you. So come and join us!
